WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A Pacific storm system will produce light to moderate precipitation and high elevation snow in portions of Northern and Central California mountainous and valley locations through this evening. Snow levels are predicted to fall to 3,500 feet.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

During the past 2 days between 1 to 3 inches of liquid water has fallen across many of the coastal areas as well as mountain ranges of the North Ops region. Additional rain and snow showers will affect Northern CA into Friday morning before dissipating. Temperatures will be below to well below normal today and Friday with a lessening wind flow.

The next system will begin to affect NW areas Friday night and spread eastward through Saturday night. This system will be more of a glancing blow for the region and favor the North Coast PSA where 0.75 to 1.5 inches of rainfall could occur. Temperatures will turn much warmer during the weekend and return to above normal status due to ridging.

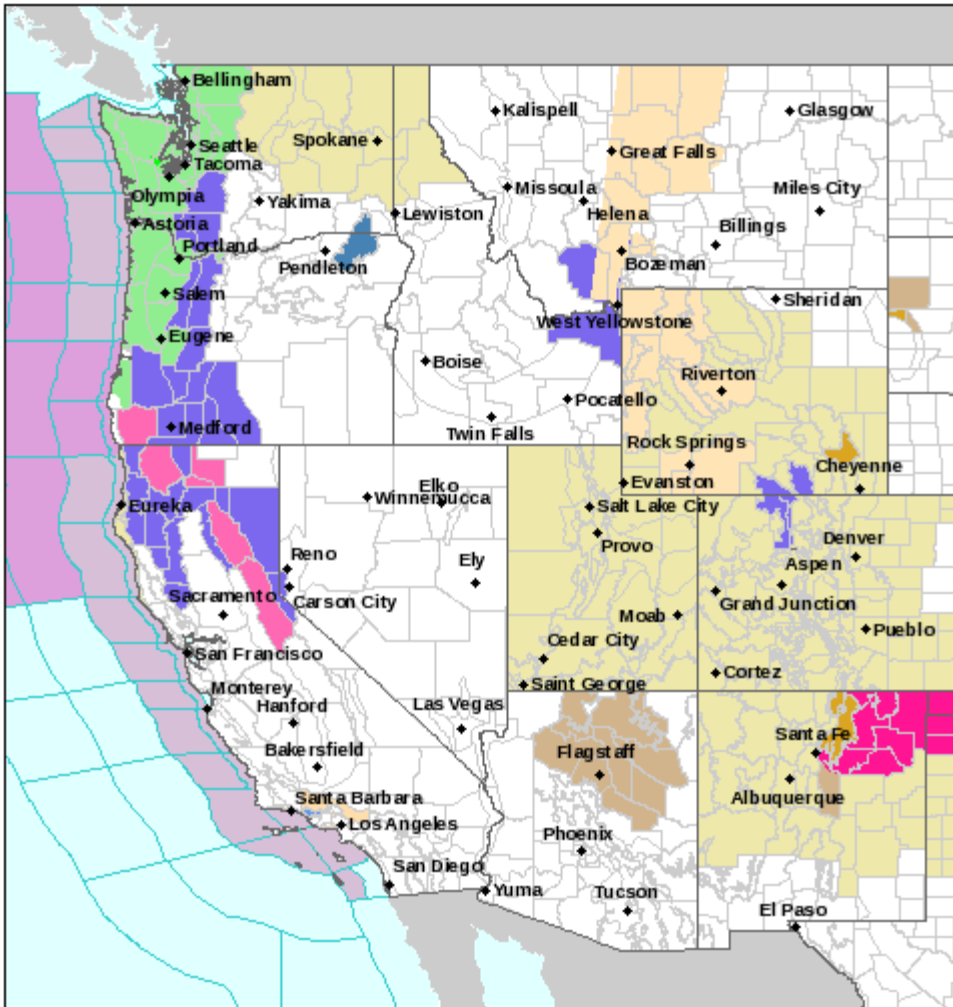

The ridge will break down early next week due to an inside slider Pacific trough. Precipitation will tend to be scant and favor the far north. Drier and gustier northerly winds should develop midweek behind the trough passage. Confidence is moderate to high that the atmospheric pattern turns drier and warmer during the next couple of weeks. This includes ridging along or just off the coast and a few inside slider Pacific troughs. Will continue to monitor the mid and long range model trends.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered showers will continue to move across Central California through this afternoon as a Pacific trough pushes inland. Most locations will receive less than a tenth of an inch of additional rainfall, but the Sierra and its surrounding foothills will receive up to a half inch of additional rainfall. The snow level will be around 5,000 feet. Westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the wind prone mountain and desert areas through this evening. There will be northerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph across Santa Barbara County and the Grapevine this evening through Friday morning. Temperatures will be around 5 degrees below normal through Friday, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. Significant warming and drying will occur Saturday through Monday as a strong ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. Temperatures will rise into the 80s across the lower elevations of Southern California Sunday and Monday. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the teens away from the San Joaquin Valley Saturday through Monday. Northeast to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will develop across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Saturday morning and then increase to 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph Saturday night through Monday morning. Winds will decrease substantially Monday afternoon and become light across the entire region by Tuesday morning. The ridge of high pressure will weaken bringing a cooling trend and a little increase in humidity next Tuesday and Wednesday.
